ISIS claims Sri Lanka blasts as gov't says probe is progressing

Sources said intelligence officials were warned by India hours prior to the attacks.

Islamic State claimed responsibility on Tuesday for the bomb attacks in Sri Lanka that killed 321 people in what officials believe was retaliation for assaults on mosques in New Zealand.

The claim, issued through the group's AMAQ news agency, was made after Sri Lanka said two domestic Islamist groups with suspected links to foreign militants were suspected to have been behind the attacks at three churches and four hotels. About 500 people were wounded in the bombings.

Three sources told Reuters that Sri Lankan intelligence officials had been warned hours earlier by India that attacks by Islamists were imminent. It was not clear what action, if any, was taken.

President Maithripala Sirisena said he would change the heads of the defense forces following their failure to act on the intelligence.

"I will completely restructure the police and security forces in the coming weeks. I expect to change the heads of defense establishments within the next 24 hours," Sirisena said in an address to the nation.

"The security officials who got the intelligence report from a foreign nation did not share it with me. I have decided to take stern action against these officials."

Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe told a news conference investigators were making progress in identifying the perpetrators.

"We will be following up on [ISIS] claims, we believe there may be some links," he said.

The government has said at least seven suicide bombers were involved.

In a statement, Islamic State named what it said were the seven attackers who carried out the attacks. It gave no further evidence to support its claim of responsibility.

Th hardline militant group, who have lost the territory they once held in Syria and Iraq to Western-backed forces, later released a video on Amaq showing eight assailants, seven of whom were masked, pledging allegiance to Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi.

Reuters could not independently verify the claim and authorities did not officially identify the assailants.

Earlier, junior minister for defense Ruwan Wijewardene told parliament two Sri Lankan Islamist groups — the National Thawheed Jama'ut and Jammiyathul Millathu Ibrahim — were responsible for the blasts, which detonated during Easter services and as hotels served breakfast.

The first six bombs — on three churches and three luxury hotels — exploded within 20 minutes of each other. Two more explosions — at a downmarket hotel and a house in a suburb of the capital, Colombo — took place in the early afternoon.

Wickremesinghe said the militants had tried to attack another hotel but had failed.

Sri Lankan government and military sources said a Syrian had been detained among 40 people being questioned over the bombs.

Most of the dead and wounded were Sri Lankans, although government officials said 38 foreigners were killed. That included British, U.S., Australian, Turkish, Indian, Chinese, Danish, Dutch and Portuguese nationals.

The U.N. Children's Fund said 45 children were among the dead.

Footage on CNN showed what it said was one of the bombers wearing a heavy backpack. The man patted a child on the head before entering the Gothic-style St. Sebastian church in Katuwapitiya, north of Colombo. Dozens were killed there.

"RETALIATION"

Wijewardene said investigators believed revenge for the March 15 killing of 50 people at two mosques during Friday prayers in the New Zealand city of Christchurch was the motive.

"The initial investigation has revealed that this was in retaliation for the New Zealand mosque attack," he said.

He did not elaborate on why authorities believed there was a link to the New Zealand bloodshed, unleashed by a lone gunman.

The bombs brought a shattering end to a relative calm that had existed in the Buddhist-majority country since a civil war against mostly Hindu, ethnic Tamil separatists ended 10 years ago, and raised fears of a return to sectarian violence.

Sri Lanka's 22 million people include minority Christians, Muslims and Hindus. Until now, Christians had largely managed to avoid the worst of the island's conflict and communal tensions.

Pressure is likely to mount on the government over why effective action had not been taken in response to warnings from India about a possible attack on churches by the little-known National Thawheed Jama'ut group.

Indian intelligence officers contacted their Sri Lankan counterparts two hours before the first attack to warn of a specific threat on churches, one Sri Lankan defense source and an Indian government source said.

Another Sri Lankan defense source said a warning came "hours before" the first strike. REUTERS

Judge won't release video in Kraft prostitution sting

2 A Florida judge on Tuesday temporarily blocked prosecutors from releasing hidden-camera footage that allegedly shows Patriots owner Robert Kraft engaged in sexual acts inside a massage parlor. The billionaire owner of the six-time Super Bowl champions is among dozens of men accused of soliciting prostitution inside Orchids of Asia Spa in Jupiter, Florida. He has pleaded not guilty to the misdemeanor charges and issued a public apology for his actions. Palm Peach County Judge Leonard Hanser said Kraft's right to a fair trial could be harmed if prosecutors release the video to media outlets, which requested the footage under Florida's robust open government laws. "The potential jury pool would be given the opportunity to preview trial evidence, including identifying [Kraft] as the person depicted in the videotapes," Hanser wrote. REUTERS

Biden to announce 2020 election run on Thursday

3 Former Vice President Joe Biden will announce on Thursday that he is seeking the Democratic Party's presidential nomination for the 2020 election, a source familiar with the plans said on Tuesday. Biden, 76, would join a crowded field of nearly 20 other candidates seeking to defeat President Donald Trump. Biden is expected to make his announcement by video and would bring an end to months of speculation about whether he would challenge Trump, who followed Obama in the White House following his 2016 victory over Democrat Hillary Clinton. Next Monday, Biden will meet with union workers in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a pivotal state that backed Trump in 2016, the source said. Trips will follow to all four early voting states — Iowa, New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada — in coming weeks, the source said, adding the details were still being completed. REUTERS

Smollett lawyers sued by alleged hoax accomplices

4 Two Nigerian-American brothers wrapped up in Jussie Smollett's Chicago hate-crime hoax sued the "Empire" actor's lawyers on Tuesday, accusing them of defamation for insisting they had "criminally attacked" the actor even after police concluded otherwise. Olabinjo and Abimbola Osundairo were briefly taken into custody as Chicago police investigated the alleged January incident in which Smollett, who is black and gay, said he was assaulted by two men who shouted racist and homophobic slurs and wrapped a noose around his neck. Police later concluded that Smollett staged the attack for publicity. Prosecutors brought and then abruptly dropped hoax charges against the actor on March 26, a stunning move that drew the fury of the city's police superintendent and mayor. REUTERS

Are you going places?

Or looking for places to go?

Managing your benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH) alone may not be enough. If you are on BPH therapy and visiting the bathroom frequently, you may have an overactive bladder (OAB).

The immediate need to 'go' interrupts your day and night – and it may not be caused by your BPH.

- Do you have to use the bathroom at least 8 times a day?
- Do you still wake up 2 or more times each night to use the bathroom?
- Do you experience a need to use the bathroom immediately (urinary urgency)?

If these symptoms disrupt your day and night, you may also have a condition called OAB.

A clinical research study is testing the safety and effectiveness of an investigational drug in men on BPH therapy experiencing OAB symptoms. Over 1000 participants in over 135 study centers across North America and Europe are expected to take part in the COURAGE Study.

New Boston Harbor ferry routes proposed

Fares will range from $6.50 to $10.

With the highways and public transit options around Boston perpetually congested, a new study funded in part by the state details potential new ferry routes to connect downtown Boston with other inner harbor points, Columbia Point and Squantum Point in Quincy.

Boston Harbor Now, formed in 2016 following the merger of the Boston Harbor Association and the Boston Harbor Island Alliance, said development along the waterfront in Boston and Quincy has and will continue to increase the demand for more and better transportation options. At the same time, improvements to docks at Columbia Point have made it possible to link institutions on that peninsula — like UMass Boston — to ferry service.

"Providing effective, reliable, affordable, and accessible scheduled water transportation connections between Quincy, Columbia Point, and downtown Boston contributes a range of social benefits. Passengers have direct benefits, including quality of life improvements from a new mobility option. There are also indirect benefits to the broader transportation system, the environment, and economic development," the group wrote in its business plan for the new ferry service. "The system will serve residents and workers, increase access to recreation and leisure destinations, and has the potential to provide resiliency and redundancy in case of an emergency."

Boston Harbor Now's plan is built around service that would connect Long Wharf North with Squantum Point/Marina Bay, with midday and weekend connections to Columbia Point at Fallon Pier, on the north side of the peninsula.

Using two leased vessels, service would run from 6:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. on weekdays, with ferries departing from each Quincy and Long Wharf every 40 minutes during peak commuting hours (6:30 a.m. to 9 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.) and every 60 minutes during off-peak hours. Ferries would depart every 60 minutes on weekends.

The group said it modeled its service assuming annual ridership levels ranging between 190,000 passengers for weekend service to 412,000 passengers for weekday service, and with fare options of both $6.50 and $10 per trip.

Boston Harbor Now said it looked at data from the MBTA's current ferry services to help model its proposed service. The price of a standard one-way ticket for the MBTA's Hingham/Hull to Long Wharf/Rowes Wharf service is $9.25 and in 2016 those ferries shuttled a combined 1,164,896 passengers, according to Boston Harbor Now. The group said its service, like others, would not turn a profit.

"Like many transit systems, the new Quincy and Columbia Point service is projected to have an operating shortfall," the group wrote. "Whether it is operated by the public sector, the private sector, or as a public-private partnership, an operating subsidy would be needed to sustain the service at any of the price points studied based on the projected ridership." 'This is just not network TV'

"Brockmire" season 3 is playing now on IFC. ALL PHOTOS KIM SIMMS/IFC

Richard Kind sat down with Metro to chat about season 3 of IFC's dark comedy "Brockmire."

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

IFC's hit show "Brockmire," starring Hank Azaria and Richard Kind, follows the story of a once-famed Major League Baseball announcer who falls from grace — hard. "Brockmire" is dark, hilarious and, most importantly, does not hold back. Kind signed on for the third season as Azaria's laid-back foil, and he certainly has made an impact on-screen. Kind sat down with Metro to give us the scoop on the third season of the show and his character, and also to explain why "Brockmire" is most certainly not for network TV.

This is your first season of the show. What can you tell me about your character?
He's very laid-back. I thought it was a very interesting dynamic. Everybody is very aggressive on this show, starting with Brockmire. They are all confrontational, and I'm just water off the duck's back — very laid-back throughout the whole thing. The first paragraph [of the season premiere's script] informed me of that. For some reason, and I think this is sort of imposed in the script, Hank was just annoyed by me. They wrote it to be an adversarial character as is every character on "Brockmire," but I'm annoying because of my attitude. But I'm not so hateful. He probably hates me because I'm a good guy.

I know that you are also friends with Hank Azaria. Were you around when the show was created?
I was around when the character was first thought of. We used to gather as friends around coffee or lunch, and Hank would do the character and we would all join in. Many years later, maybe 10 to 20 years later, somebody said, "You know, this would make a great movie." And Hank agreed. We couldn't get it as a movie, but they picked it [up] as a TV show. So I was around for the creation of the character but not for the movie or TV show. I had nothing to do with it. For the third season, I auditioned for the role, and they gave it to me.

This season, "Brockmire" is trying to better himself. How do you think this third season compares to the first two? Can fans still expect the same Brockmire and all of his antics?
I think the tone of the show is as cynical and dark and deeply, sadly funny as the first two seasons. Even though he is sober now, he continues to be a real jerk.

How would you describe the show to someone who has never seen it?
Have you ever seen the cover of "National Lampoon" [magazine] where it has a gun to a dog's head and it says, "If you don't buy this magazine, we'll kill this dog?" It's a very famous cover, and that describes it all. If you don't watch this show, we may kill some of the actors. I'm kidding. It's a dark and cynical and distinctly funny show. Not because it's politically incorrect, but it's just not network TV. We pride ourselves on that.

What makes it "not network" in your eyes?
Because some people don't like the ease of a situational comedy, where the laughs come every three lines and there are laugh tracks. Some people like something different, and I don't think a character like this would ever make it on network TV. There used to be a show years ago that was quite great and brilliant called "Buffalo Bill," with Dabney Coleman. It was a very funny show and very dark, but it only lasted one season. That's what network TV can't handle. If you look up the show, you will see the type of humor that this was.

So you would put this show in the dark comedy category. Do you think some people might get turned off by that?
Absolutely, we wear that badge with pride. If you watch the first three episodes and it's not your cup of tea, do not continue. But I encourage you to watch the first couple of episodes, and if you like the tone and you like the comedy, the show just keeps getting better.

Kyrie Irving looks for two earlier this season against Milwaukee.

GETTY IMAGES

CELTICS WILL DISMANTLE MILWAUKEE

OPINION

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is the Executive Sports Editor of Metro US Newspapers and the Founder of MetroBet.us.

The 2018-19 Milwaukee Bucks are nothing but paper champions, led by a dude that was shut down in the playoffs last season by Semi Ojeleye, and a point guard that has the bark of a Kevin Garnett but the bite/game of a Marcus Banks.

Khris Middleton is a nice little player, but his ceiling in this league is fringe All-Star. He's already peaked.

And their coach – Mike Budenholzer – makes Brad Stevens look like Red Auerbach in terms of postseason NBA success. Budenholzer you'll remember was out-schemed by the likes of Frank Vogel and Scott Brooks in the playoffs during his time in Atlanta, and absolutely crumbled at the sight of LeBron James and a guy named Kyrie Irving whenever the calendar flipped to May.

Now based on all of the mainstream NBA chatter, calling the Celtics the sure-fire favorites in this upcoming Eastern Conference semifinal series may initially sound crazy. But we in Boston have seen how this sort of thing plays out before.

Playoff experience matters in the NBA. Like … a lot.

The Celtics know this first-hand as they were knocked out of the postseason by LeBron's Cavs in three of the past four years. In one of those years (2017), they were the top overall seed in the East. Didn't matter.

Last year the Celtics were again the higher seed, facing the No. 4 seeded Cavs – who looked like trash for much of the regular season. Again – didn't matter.

With the playoff-tested Irving now at the forefront of the Celtics ship for the first time in the postseason, the shoe is now on the other foot. The Celtics are now the cagey, old wise men in the East. And the Bucks are the team with a recent embarrassing early playoff exit, and the team that still looks one player away from truly being thought of as a legit title contender despite the fancy No. 1 seed title.

Giannis Antetokounmpo.

GETTY IMAGES

Of course, plenty of people are throwing cold water on the notion that the Celtics have actually found a cure for whatever it was that caused so much unrest during the regular season.

I'm hearing a lot of, "Yeah. They beat the Pacers. Congratulations."

But it was the way in which they dismantled Indiana that made me believe that the C's truly have "flipped the switch."

Boston trailed in the second half of each of the four games against Indiana. That's actually a good thing.

In other words, they were punched in the mouth in every single game. Unlike the regular season C's, the 2018-19 playoff Celtics responded with an even bigger haymaker every time they were dealt a blow.

That is an exceptional sign for any playoff team.

And then there is the eye test.

Irving looked "right" against Indiana. When the Celtics needed him to take over a game, he was there to do so. When they needed him to be a facilitator, he was there to do so.

Gordon Hayward also finally looked "right." He attacked the basket in a way we haven't seen since he was wearing Navy & Gold in Salt Lake City, and he looked extremely fluid on both ends of the floor.

In the Celtics' seven game triumph over the Bucks in the first round last year, the C's of course didn't have Irving or Hayward.

It's hard to believe the addition of two All-Star talents, both of whom have more postseason experience than Giannis, doesn't outweigh the improvement of the Milwaukee big man from one year to the next. Even if he is the MVP.

Celtics in 5.

Homestand should help settle down Red Sox

VSiN

Red Sox fans haven't had much of a chance to see their favorite Major League Baseball team in person at Fenway Park in the 2019 season. A quirk in the schedule had the Sox playing 16 of their first 22 games on the road.

Conversely, fans of the New York Yankees and Tampa Bay Rays got to see a lot of their favorite teams. The Yanks played 15 of their first 21 games in the Bronx, while the Rays will play 16 of their first 25 indoors down in Florida.

Sports bettors who aren't paying attention to short term schedule dynamics can make the mistake of drawing false conclusions about team quality. In any sport, teams usually aren't as good as they look after friendly home-heavy schedules, nor as vulnerable as they might look in the standings after a long road stretch.

Your perceptions about the American League East hopes of the Red Sox, Yankees, and Rays may change after those schedules equalize. That's in the process of happening right now.

Mookie Betts and Alex Cora. GETTY IMAGES

Boston's current series with Detroit is part of a 10-game homestand that will put the Sox at 16 home games, 16 road games after the action on May 1.

New York's current road series at the Los Angeles Angels launches a nine-game Western swing that will put the Yanks at 15 home games, 15 road games after May 1.

Tampa Bay begins a 10-game road trip Friday at Fenway that will put the Rays at 19 home games, 19 road games after May 5.

Fans and bettors will have a much clearer read on divisional dynamics in early May.

Note that schedule illusions are common in all betting sports. Sometimes it's related to strength of schedule. That's most dramatic in college betting sports football and basketball, where running up the score against cupcakes won't say much about how a team will perform vs. quality. But, it's also true in any pro sport with a clear dichotomy of haves and have nots.

Frankly, illusions from schedule strength could even be an important analytical factor in the upcoming Boston Celtics/Milwaukee Bucks series. The Bucks represent a huge step up in class from the easily vanquished Indiana Pacers. Will Boston's defense be ready for that challenge? Will Milwaukee get caught flat-footed after mauling playoff pretender Detroit?

Sharps (pro bettors) focus on player and team skill sets, while trying to avoid illusions caused by schedule dynamics. Important to remember whenever handicapping games involving your favorite teams.

Aries Control your emotions. You may not like what you see or hear, but you need to rise above it and do your own thing. The changes you make will lead to opportunity -- arguments will lead nowhere.

Taurus Go over your options and make changes based on what's good for you, not on what someone else wants. Secrets will be revealed if you trust someone you shouldn't.

Gemini Before you offer to do something, find out what's entailed. Someone is likely to expect or ask for too much if you aren't specific about what you are willing to do.

Cancer Your intuition won't let you down. What someone is telling you won't jibe with your own impressions. Follow your heart, ask direct questions and remain calm.

Leo Personal goals can be made, and friendships formed. Delve into something that will encourage you to hone your skills and make changes that will alleviate emotional stress.

Virgo Don't let uncertainty take charge and ruin your plans. Participate in events that will lead to information, experience and opportunity. Put your energy where you will get the most in return.

Libra Be careful how you handle domestic situations or partnerships with people who can influence your status or reputation. If you feel pressured by someone, don't argue -- just ask them to back away.

Scorpio Spend more time searching for answers and looking for something that excites you. Expanding your knowledge, skills and talents will encourage you to try something you've never done before.

Sagittarius Focus on home, family and important relationships. Observe different cultures and lifestyles, and make changes that free up time for you to do things you enjoy with people you love.

Capricorn Consider what makes you happy, and make changes to suit your needs. Fixing up your space or making adjustments to your living arrangements will encourage you to spend more time at home.

Aquarius Make changes that will help you put the past behind you and forge into the future with optimism and solid plans. Romance will have an effect on your personal life.

Pisces Proceed with caution and listen carefully. Someone will present a false impression or exaggerate a situation to sway your opinion. Go directly to the source and get the facts. EUGENIA LAST
